The Chinese Journal of International Law
and
Oxford University Press

We are delighted to announce that publication of the Chinese Journal of International Law will be taken on by Oxford University Press from the first issue of 2005 onwards. We believe that this new partnership will greatly expand the visibility of the Journal through the increased levels of marketing and distribution that we can offer as a global publisher, and that the Journal will be a valuable addition to our strong list of journals in international law. Our new partnership will help the Journal to fulfil its ambition of serving as the international law forum for China, Asia and the developing world at large.

We shall be working alongside the Editorial Board to help develop the Journal, in part by involving more non-Chinese Asian scholars as well as scholars from other developing countries, and also by making the Journal available online.

The new Chinese Journal of International Law website at the Press will include fully searchable, full text articles in both html and pdf formats, current issues and all back issues and offer the following new functionality:

- Search through full-text HTML papers and across tables of contents and abstracts, by any combination of subject, author or keyword;
- Extend your search to include articles from other journals hosted by our online partner, Stanford University's Highwire Press;
- References are linked to other journals via Crossref;
- Toll-free linking – references link direct to the full text of articles from other journals hosted by Highwire Press, provided to you at no extra cost;
- Forward-citing links – jump from an article of interest to another article that has since cited it;
- Table of contents email alerts; and
- Email alerts by author, keyword and subject.

The website will be launched to coincide with the first issue of 2005. In the meantime look for updates on: www.chinesejil.oupjournals.org.

The Press will provide the Journal and the above services at the most reasonable price in keeping with its tradition. We will send you a renewal notice in due time with more detailed information.

Finally, we would like to reassure readers that the Journal will retain its existing editorial structure, its valuable association with the Chinese Society of International Law, and the consistently high quality of articles and contributors that you have come to expect over the last three years.

Best regards,

The Law Journals Team
